PRESIDENT'S NOTE

Change is the Name of the Game

/ by G. JACKSON HUGHES, President, Carolinas Golf Association

› “Nothing endures but change.”

— Heraclitus of Ephesus

The CGA has certainly faced change of late — some by design and some not. We have faced more monumental decisions in the last three years than in the previous 102. Let's look back:

› Carolinas Golf House: We started the dialog of creating a new CGA headquarters and historical center in 2000. Now that dream will come true.

In 1991, we moved from the Tanglewood Clubhouse in Clemmons, N.C., to set up camp in West End (a.k.a. Seven Lakes) with the help of the late Peter Tufts. Meanwhile, our staff has grown from five to 15 so we are moving to a spot in Pine Needles that will grow with us. Its 13,500 square feet includes a heritage museum/visitor center to showcase golf in the Carolinas. Come see us!

› GHIN® Comes to the Carolinas: The USGA and GHIN committed to investing substantial resources to put the CGA on the leading edge of technology. There have been a few bumps in the road, which makes all of us even more determined to be the leader in the industry. The CGA has almost 150,000 members of 700 clubs who deserve the best, and we will deliver.

› The Reunion: This Carolinas Golf Foundation event is a wonderful fundraiser to benefit many Carolinas-based initiatives. We hope you will keep this on your radar. (See related article on Page 8.)

› Carolinas Golf Hall of Fame: The Carolinas Golf Reporters Association has done an outstanding job over the years honoring Carolinians who have made a difference in golf. Now they've asked the CGA to take it over, and we agreed.

› New CGA Agronomist: For the last 15 years, Dr. Leon Lucas has been a rock for the CGA agronomy department. His contributions to the game, and to so many of the superintendents and club green committees, are too numerous to count. He hangs up his turf temperature gauge and soil sampler at the end of 2014. His replacement is Bill Anderson (read more on Page 15). We wish Dr. Lucas the best.

› Back-to-Back U.S. Opens Are History: It appears the men's and women's Opens were huge successes. Here's a new idea for the USGA: Hold the men's and women's Opens back-to-back once again, but play the men at Pinehurst No. 2 and the women down the street at Pine Needles. But wait, then they would have to deal with that vicious Pinehurst traffic circle, huh?

It appears Heraclitus was spot on with his philosophy and we are living proof!

› Michael Dann: Our friend and 22-year employee Michael Dann died unexpectedly at home July 15 (see related articles on Pages 6 and 26). Michael was as devoted and dedicated as they come and will be sorely missed.

Rest in peace, my friend.

NEWS & NOTEWORTHY EVENTS AROUND THE CAROLINAS

> CGA, Golf Community Mourn Sudden Loss of Michael Dann

Carolinas Golf Association Director of Course Rating and Handicapping, Michael Harley Dann, died unexpectedly in his sleep July 15, 2014, at his home in Seven Lakes, N.C. He was 65.

Born in Detroit, Mich., he moved with his family to Glenview, Ill., when he was 11. While attending Loyola Academy Jesuit College Preparatory School in Wilmette, he was active on the golf team. He earned a bachelor's and a master's degree in journalism from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he also played on the golf team and was a reporter and editor for the newspaper.

Dann later described his career combining journalism and golf as a "story of serendipity." Not long after college graduation, he was hired to write for Golf World magazine in Southern Pines, N.C. As he told it, "One of the magazine writers overimbibed at an airport and missed a flight en route to an assignment, resulting in his termination. If he hadn't missed his flight, I wouldn't have gotten the job."

And so began a long career marrying his craft with a love of golf. Leaving Golf World, he went on to handle public relations for Pinehurst Resort. After that, he served as director at the World Golf Hall of Fame; editor of Virginia Golfer magazine; manager of the USGA Members Program; and vice president of marketing for Video Magazines International.

Dann came to the CGA in 1992, working with some 160 course ratings volunteers and training them to rate courses; he was also executive publisher of Carolinas Golf magazine.

In a short career summary that he wrote in 2013, he closed by saying, "Dann and his wife, Dianne, have three children, three dogs, two vans, and a mortgage."

In addition to his wife of 30 years, Dann is survived by his children, Gregory, Megan, and Kevin; sisters Barbara (Kim) Chapman, Patricia (George) Kichinko, Margaret (Steve) Mitchell, and Maja (Urs) Freiburghaus; nieces and nephews; and a great-niece and nephew.

Donations in his memory may be made to the Carolinas Golf Association, P.O. Box 319, West End, N.C., 27376 to support Carolinas Golf House, the new headquarters and museum for the CGA. (See Page 26 for colleagues' remembrances.)

Pinehurst to host 2017 U.S. Amateur Four-Ball

Pinehurst Resort & Country Club in Pinehurst, N.C., has been selected by the United States Golf Association (USGA) as the site of the 2017 U.S. Amateur Four-Ball Championship to be held May 27-31. With 128 two-player teams, two courses will be needed for the championship. Pinehurst No. 2 will serve as the match-play course and No. 4 will serve as the companion course.

"It is fitting that the 2017 championship will be contested at a place that has played a significant role in the history of American golf," says Daniel B. Burton, USGA vice president and chairman of the Championship Committee.

Don Padgett, president of Pinehurst, says hosting the U.S. Amateur Four-Ball extends Pinehurst's "deep connection" with the USGA.

"Our friendship with the USGA was forged by the founding Tufts family and continues to this day," Padgett says. "And for nearly as long, Pinehurst has held events that showcase the best in amateur golf."

The USGA's amateur four-ball championships are new, debuting the men and women in 2015 at The Olympic Club in San Francisco, Calif., and Bandon Dunes Resort in Bandon, Ore., respectively. The 2016 events will be held at Winged Foot Golf Club in Mamaroneck, N.Y. (men) and Streamsong Resort in Bowling Green, Fla. (women). The 2017 women's site hasn't been determined yet.

Teams are made up of two players each playing their own ball throughout the round. Each team's score is determined by using the lower score of the partners for each hole. After 36 holes of stroke-play qualifying, the field will be reduced to the low 32 teams for the championship's match-play bracket, from which the eventual champions will be determined. Eligibility is limited to amateurs whose individual handicap index does not exceed 5.4.

➤ Pinehurst Buys National Golf Club
National Golf Club has become Course No. 9 at Pinehurst Resort.

Pinehurst recently purchased the nearby National Golf Club from the Robinette family. Opened in 1989, it's the only Jack Nicklaus Signature Design course in the Sandhills region. The acquisition gives Pinehurst a collection of courses designed or restored by some of the game's most recognized names, including Donald Ross, Bill Coore and Ben Crenshaw, Rees Jones, Tom Fazio, and Ellis Maples.

"The golf course presents a challenging test in a beautiful setting that complements our eight other courses," says Jay Biggs, senior vice president of golf and club operations for Pinehurst.

National Golf Club recently underwent a renovation that softened green contours and re-grassed with more consistent A1/A4 bentgrass. In addition to a 30,000-square-foot clubhouse slated for renovation and expansion under Pinehurst management, National offers five tennis courts, a pool, banquet facilities, and restaurant.

➤ Junior Lisbeth Brooks and the team

➤ Campbell Women's Golf Sets Records

The Campbell University Fighting Camels women's golf team claimed its first NCAA Championship berth since 1997 this year. The team from Buies Creek, N.C., set a school record for lowest 54-hole score in NCAA postseason play to get the spot. Ranked 45th, the Camels went on to finish in a tie for 20th place (305-303-289-281 — 1178) in the 24-team event with No. 20

Michigan State. The Big South Conference champs also placed better than three schools ranked among the nation's top 30: No. 25 California, No. 24 Iowa State, and No. 29 Kansas. With 293, junior Lisbeth Brooks was Campbell's low individual in the NCAA championship (T50th). Tahnia Ravnjak played her final two rounds at even-par and finished with 298. Freshman Nadine White recorded back-to-back 72s over the last two rounds to shoot 302.

➤ A Celebration of Carolinas Golf

Carolinas Golf Association's annual The Reunion will be held Sept. 21 and 22 at Pine Needles Lodge and Golf Resort in Southern Pines, N.C.

Much of CGA monies are being devoted to the construction of the soon-to-open Carolinas Golf House — new home to the CGA. That means events like The Reunion, which generate funds to support Carolinas Golf Foundation initiatives, are all the more important.

The Foundation primarily supports and promotes junior and women's golf, turfgrass research and management, disabled golfers, and other Carolinas golf projects.

"For years, we earmarked a certain amount of money from CGA investments to go toward the Foundation," says CGA Executive Director Jack Nance. "Now because we're putting money toward our golf house, we need a source to replace it."

The third annual fundraiser in September is expected to feature participation from about 18 teams. To date, the event has raised about $60,000. Comedian Henry Cho heads the entertainment lineup.

The Reunion offers golf at Mid Pines with an evening social on opening day. Monday has a team consisting of a pro/celebrity playing with four amateurs. They may register individually or as a group.

Those confirmed to be there so far include Harold Varner, Paul Simson, Jerry Haas, Drew Weaver, Walter Hall, William McGirt, John Maginnes, and David Eger.

A silent auction will be held for the second year. Bidding opens several weeks prior. Last year's inaugural auction included golf getaways, a golf cart, lessons with pros, and more.

"The Reunion is designed to raise money for our foundation and to have fun in the process," Nance says. "It's basically a celebration of golf in the Carolinas."

➤ Old Chatham Tops Triangle's Private Courses

Old Chatham Golf Club in the Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill Triangle area was named Triangle's top private golf course for 2014 by the Triangle Business Journal.

Old Chatham members played 12,000 rounds in 2013; that number is kept small to enhance the member experience, according to club officials. A Rees Jones design, Old Chatham was established on 400 acres in 2001 by area business leaders.

> Faidley Learning Center to Open

The John Faidley Learning Center will be constructed at Winston Lake

Golf Course in Winston-Salem, N.C., and will be the first teaching facility in the Greensboro-Winston Salem-High Point area to also include an academic center.

The center will feature hitting bays, a practice putting green, an observation deck for parents to watch their children grow in the program, and a building to house a computer center for homework.

The center was made possible after an anonymous donor pledged a $100,000 matching grant to The First Tee of the Triad, and Landmark Builders based in Winston-Salem volunteered to cover building costs. The Self Foundation also pledged $75,000 over three years to fund academic center technology and curriculum.

John Faidley has been head PGA professional at Winston-Salem's

Forsyth Country Club since 2001. Faidley and club members have hosted the Forsyth Country Club Celebrity Pro-Am for five years, with nearly $500,000 raised supporting The First Tee of the Triad over time. The organization's aim is to teach kids ages 7-18 positive life skills using the game of golf.

The First Tee of the Triad is still looking for two significant benefactors to fully fund the project. For more information, visit thefirstteetriad.org. The goal is to have the facility open for their participants by fall 2014.

CADDIE MIKE HICKS REFLECTS ON 1999 U.S. OPEN WIN

/ written by LEE PACE

Fifteen years ago, Mike Hicks was center stage on the 18th green of Pinehurst No. 2. In 2014, he was back at Pinehurst.

Hicks was Payne Stewart's caddie in the 1999 U.S. Open. His role was basically the standard "Show up, keep up, shut up" job description emblazoned on the psyche of all good caddies.

"There was no small talk between Payne and I that week," Hicks says. "He didn't say five words to me, other than, 'What do we got? What's it playing? How's the wind?' I never read a putt. I might have pulled one club — that was a lay-up on the 10th hole.

"What really astounded me was the focus that he had, the look of determination on his face. He was in his own little world that week."

'Best Spot in the House'

Of course, it was Hicks to whom Stewart immediately turned after draining a 15-foot putt to save par and win the championship by one shot over Phil Mickelson. Hicks was holding the flagstick in his right arm, then dropped it to the ground when he jumped spread-eagle into Stewart's arms.

"I had the best spot in the house 15 years ago," Hicks says. "Nothing can ever top that."

This year, Hicks stood on a dais on the west side of the Pinehurst clubhouse the Tuesday before the U.S. Open. He addressed a gathering of 1,000 or so individuals at a ceremony to present Stewart posthumously with the Bob Jones Award, the USGA's annual tribute to a golfer who exhibits the spirit, personal character, and respect for the game that Jones did.

"Payne was 'all-in' mentally for the U.S. Open," Hicks says. "He was a very patriotic guy and nothing motivated him more than playing in the U.S. Open or playing for his country in the Ryder Cup.

"Consider this: Payne played in 15 U.S. Opens, and 11 times he went to sleep with the lead. That's still a record for the U.S. Open."

Remembering Stewart

Hicks was among six speakers at the awards ceremony who shared anecdotes and observentions on the life and times of Stewart. The two-time Open winner died in October 1999 when the private jet he was traveling in from Orlando, Fla., to Dallas lost cabin pressure and crashed in South Dakota.

PGA Tour players Paul Azinger and Peter Jacobson, sports psychologist Richard Coop, USGA President Tom O'Toole, and Payne's daughter Chelsea Stewart took turns speaking. They were insightful and upbeat in what was a fitting 60-minute tribute to Stewart.

"It was a great ceremony; it was perfect," says Hicks, now retired from caddying and exploring a number of enterprises from his home in Mebane, N.C. "It was another great reminder of what happened 15 years ago.

"There will always be a hole in your heart for him and his family. That's never going to go away. But time heals all wounds. The Bob Jones Award was very fitting for Payne, and it was a great reminder to everyone how special a man he had become."

A Month Becomes Years

From 1981-'88, Hicks caddied on the PGA Tour for players like Lon Hinkle, David Edwards, Don Pooley, and Curtis Strange, Stewart's buddy. With Strange vouching for him, Hicks offered his services to Stewart in 1988. And so began a one-month trial run.

"Payne finished in the Top 10 four weeks in a row and what started as one month turned into 12 years," Hicks says.

Hicks was on the bag when Stewart won and club-makers over the life of his contract, which expired in 1998, to develop clubs and a ball better suited to his game and swing. As the equipment became a better fit, he gradually worked back into his previous form.

Hicks could see as the 1999 season evolved that Stewart's old swing was coming back. And with his Spalding contract expired, he was playing Lynx irons. The Titleist balls he preferred were back in his bag as well.

"When Payne was playing his best, the club would go back a little shut, and then drop to the inside coming into the ball," Hicks says. "When you do that, you have to have good timing to get back to the ball. Not everyone can play that way. His biggest asset was his timing and hands — his hand-eye coordination was incredible."

A Big Comeback

"By 1999, he was back hitting from a little inside the plane," Hicks adds. "When he had it on-plane, he could do whatever he wanted with the ball. You could see it coming back."

Stewart led the Open in 1998 at The Olympic Club by four strokes entering the final round. However, he struggled to a 74 and lost by one shot to the surging Lee Janzen, who fired a 68. The round included a slowplay warning from USGA official Tom Meeks after Stewart's drive on the 12th hole had the misfortune of coming to rest in a sand-filled divot. Stewart had acquired a sense of peace with his life and his golf game over the years — partly a result of that new spiritual life — and handled the loss with his head held high. At Meeks' suggestion during a visit with Stewart months later, he even practiced hitting shots out of sand-filled divots.

"Lo and behold, Payne drove into four sand divots that week at Pinehurst," Hicks says. "Twice it happened on the fifth hole, and he made par both times. That will always stick out in my mind — that he had the vision to prepare for instances like that."

Since Stewart's death, Hicks has worked at various times for Greg Norman, Justin Leonard, Steve Stricker, Jonathan Byrd, Charles Howell, Bob Estes, and most recently, Spencer Levin. But at 53 and with a bad back, he's given up the road for good. He gives golf lessons at Mill Creek Golf Club and most enjoys working with younger players. Hicks helps them put together the entire package based on what he learned from decades on the Tour: swing skills, course management, and mental focus "so they can caddie for themselves," he says. He also sells putters from the SeeMore line that Stewart was using in 1999 and has a new golf course and real estate aerial photography business using a drone and attached camera.

Hicks attended this year's U.S. Open as a guest of the USGA and reflected often on that special June day in 1999. He recalls hosting Stewart the Sunday after his win at the Open overnight and then playing in a fundraising exhibition the next day at Mill Creek.

"To win in your home state, then to have the major champion stay in your house — that just doesn't happen," Hicks says. "But I was blessed enough and fortunate enough to have that happen."

Been There, Done That

BILL ANDERSON BRINGS EXPERIENCE TO NEW POST WITH CGA / written by TRENT BOUTS

As the Carolinas Golf Association's new agronomist in 2015, Bill Anderson will be more about mentoring than microscopes.

Anderson starts his new role Jan. 1 after a 40-year career as the certified golf course superintendent at Carmel Country Club in Charlotte, N.C. He follows Drs. Carl Blake and, most recently, Leon Lucas.

"I really hope my experience can help superintendents and their clubs solve problems on the front end and not so much after the fact," Anderson says. "So much of the job today is about managing resources and expectations. Long-range planning, manpower analysis, effective budgeting, communications — these are all critical skills for superintendents today, in addition to knowing the agronomics."

The CGA launched its agronomy service — the first regional association to do so — in 1982. It remains free to member clubs.

That same year, Dr. James Beard published Turf Management for Golf Courses, which remains the best-selling reference in the field. Anderson studied turfgrass under Beard at Michigan State University after earning an Evans Scholarship as a caddy at Point O' Woods Golf and Country Club in Benton Harbor, Mich. Since the release of what is often referred to as "Beard's Bible," science and the superintendent profession have advanced to a point where A-grade agronomic expertise is a minimum requirement — not a differentiator.

Focus on Communication

An increasingly critical element in the superintendent's tool kit is communication. In the past, some of the best superintendents could simply let their work speak for itself, but that is no longer enough for most clubs and their members. They want to know what is being spent where, when, and why. As Anderson explains, superintendents should anticipate those questions and be prepared to respond.

"Building consensus is so important in arriving at a point where everyone understands what the goals are and what is achievable," he says. "That can be a challenge when your board or your greens committee is made up of people with such varied ideas on what they want to see.

"Every club has golfers with radically different ideas about what constitutes the right green speed. It's often the same on boards and committees, where you have people who are volunteers with their own take on how the golf course should be. So your job is to provide good information that can lead to good decisions."

Anderson has spent time at both the foot and head of a table in the boardroom, delivering reports at Carmel and directing affairs as president of the 1,800-member Carolinas Golf Course Superintendents Association. He is also an avid golfer who carries a 7 handicap and has played in many CGA tournaments — something he wishes more superintendents would do to improve their understanding of the golf course from the player's perspective.

Tapping Resources

In addition to the knowledge he gained during his career, Anderson built an extensive list of contacts that reads like a "who's who" of golf. It is a contact book he intends to open to clients in his new role. He also plans to rely on the plant pathology labs at Clemson and North Carolina State universities.

"I can get people in touch with the right people," he says. "I think that will be helpful. And I have always been a student of the profession. I've always enjoyed learning as I go and I think that's a strong point."

Anderson cites Pinehurst Resort's bold move taking the No. 2 course back to its Donald Ross roots with centerline irrigation and sandy waste areas in place of bermudagrass rough as an example of industry "learning." No. 2 drew overwhelmingly positive reviews during and after the first back-to-back men's and women's U.S. Opens in June on browned-out fairways — in contrast to previous men's Opens there in 1999 and 2005.

"I give the USGA and Pinehurst credit. I think they got it right for what they were looking to do with the conditions that exist in the Sandhills," Anderson says. "I think you will see some courses follow suit and look to emulate at least part of what was done at No. 2.

"But it takes some homework to work out how to do it right. It's not for everybody and every course. But I do think that if water and money are among your limitations, then it's smart business to look at what you can change on the edges to lower the amount of maintenance."

What Would Donald Do?

WILMINGTON MUNICIPAL GETS RESTORED TO DESIGNER’S ORIGINAL PLANS

/ written by LEE PACE

David Donovan suspected from the early days of his tenure as head pro at North Carolina’s Wilmington Municipal Golf Course that the greens complexes and putting surfaces were not what Donald Ross designed nearly 80 years ago.

“I had played a number of Ross courses and knew what to look for,” says Donovan, who came to Wilmington Muni in 2007. “It wasn’t here. I did some research at the library and talked to old-timers and learned that Ross built sand greens in the ’20s, but they never got irrigation until 1953.

“There was never any grass on the greens for 25 years, and by the time they did put grass on them, Ross had been dead five years.”

It took architect John Fought just six or seven holes on his first tour of the course in the fall of 2013 to see Donovan’s point.

“I could find absolutely no remnants of the original greens,” says Fought, a former PGA Tour player and architect based in Scottsdale, Ariz. “No one built the greens that he designed.”

That’s why a restoration of the Ross-designed course in Wilmington is so historically significant. While the routing is true to Ross’ drawings from 1925, the work that Fought is doing, with an eye on a fall 2014 completion, is introducing greens that were never actually installed to the original specifications.

“I have never seen anything quite like this situation,” says Fought, best known in the Carolinas for his restoration of Pine Needles Golf Club in Southern Pines in 2003-’04. “Generally, I can find the remnants of the old green corners, but it was obvious to me that his full design was never completed.”

Game of the People

Much of Ross’ design work from his base in Pinehurst over the early part of the 20th century was for private clubs in cities across the Eastern Seaboard and Midwest. But with roots in Scotland, where the game was more readily embraced across all class lines, Ross knew that public and municipal courses had their place.

Ross designed several municipal and daily-fee courses in the Carolinas, including Asheville, Asheboro, and the first nine holes at Fort Mill.

“There is no good reason why the label ‘rich man’s game’ should be hung on golf,” Ross wrote before 1914 in a manuscript later published in the book, Golf Has Never Failed Me. “The development of municipal golf courses is the outstanding feature of the game in America today. It is the greatest step ever taken to make it the game of the people, as it should be.

“The municipal courses are all moneymakers and big moneymakers. I am naturally conservative, yet I am certain that in a few years we will see golf played much more generally than is even played now.”

In recent years, Wilmington Muni has played upward of 60,000 rounds a year. Donovan and his maintenance staff have built or expanded approximately 20 new tees and regrassed the fairways on the par-71, 6,564-yard course. He began thinking seriously in 2010 about a restoration that would include building the greens as drawn in plans on file at the Tufts Archives in Pinehurst, solving a number of drainage issues around the putting surfaces.

Restoring the Vision

The city of Wilmington gave the go-ahead in the fall of 2013 to use money from the course’s enterprise fund, meaning few tax dollars would be needed. The course is self-supporting through green fees, cart fees, and golf shop and snack bar revenue.

At an estimated cost of $800,000, the project includes new greens complexes, bunkers, and putting surfaces on all 18 holes, several new/rebuilt tees, some tree removal to improve sunlight and air flow, and the removal/repositioning of cart paths in some areas. Most significant will be the greens complexes. The bunkers will be edged with Zoysia grass to make them less maintenance-intense, the collars planted with 419 Bermuda, and the greens sprigged with MiniVerde Bermuda.

“The greens averaged a little over 2,500 square feet and those on Ross’ plans were more like 5,400,” Fought says. “He had drawn little round circles for the sand greens, which were to be temporary until they installed irrigation. But no one there has any recollection of irrigation being installed until the ’50s. So no one has ever built the greens he designed.”

“The greens before were flat — no movement or contours and major drainage problems in front of all the greens,” Donovan adds. “John has created all kinds of movement around the greens. They come up 2, 3, 4 feet in the air, mushroom out, have proper drainage and all the strategic elements around them. That’s something this course has never had. It’s really cool looking.”

The greens were sprigged in mid-July, and the course was scheduled to open in late September or early October. Donovan said green fees will be boosted to $35-$39 for 18 holes with cart to help fund an expanded maintenance budget. Located just off Oleander Drive midway between downtown and the beach, the course gives Wrightsville Beach vacationers a quality and convenient golf option.

“This will put us on the map now,” Donovan says. “Now we have the caliber that will draw people from out of town. An authentic Ross course right in Wilmington for under $40 — we’ll be a draw.”

Fought first learned to play golf in the 1960s on a municipal course in Portland, Ore., so a project like the one in Wilmington has a certain personal appeal. In addition to the Pine Needles restoration a decade ago, he’s directing a similar restoration of Rosedale Golf Club, a Ross course in Toronto.

“My first five years playing golf were on municipal golf courses,” Fought says. “These courses are so important to the game.

“Good design stands the test of time. Because Donald Ross did such a good job, golfers enjoy the game there today. Ninety years later, we enjoy the fruits of his labor.”

Start Loving Your Sand Wedge

TAKE A CUE FROM THE PROS

/ written by KRISTA DUNTON / illustration by KEVIN FALES

Most amateur golfers have a love-hate relationship with their sand wedge — more often leaning toward hate than warm fuzzies.

However, professional golfers use their wedges so often that the grooves get worn out. To maximize spin, they might replace their wedges every three to four months. If you, too, learn to use your wedges correctly, you can hit a variety of shots and lower your scores from 100 yards and in.

What makes a sand wedge unique? Two factors: loft and bounce. To utilize these factors, though, your setup must be correct.

The biggest mistake amateurs make is to shove the handle of the grip forward, eliminating the loft and bounce. The first absolute to great wedge shots — especially the soft ones — is to keep the handle of the club at your belly button. Even if the ball position is back, keep the grip toward your middle. Chunks and skulls are caused from the handle being too far forward. That means you have a closed club face and a leading edge that are digging into the ground or skulling into the middle of the ball — the two dreaded shots we are trying to eliminate. Narrow your stance with your front foot flared slightly and stack your head over your belt buckle, not behind the ball.

All in the Technique

The pitch shot is a sweepy shot that needs a wide and shallow bottom. For that reason, the path of the club needs to be swinging from the inside.

Keep the club head low to the ground going back; the chunk and chop miss is from picking the club up and hitting down on it too much. The head should stay low and wide going back so that it can bottom out slightly behind the ball and slide under the ball at impact, creating a wide and shallow bottom to the swing instead of a steep and narrow one.

Picture how an airplane lands and glides on the runway, or a baseball player slides into second base. They hit the ground, then slide. It's the same with your pitch shots. Let the club bottom out and slide under the ball, utilizing the loft and bounce.

Try the following drill. Place a coin behind your ball. Try to hit the coin and then the ball. (See Figure 1.) You will be amazed at the soft shot you produce.

Also, face is better open than closed. A closed club face will dig into the ground, but an open face will slide under the ball, hitting a soft shot. Either set the face slightly open or allow the club face to open slightly in the backswing.

Soft Shot, Soft Arms

Any time you are using touch and feel, you need to create touch and feel in your hands and arms. So with your pitches, maintain soft, relaxed arms. This shot should feel more like an underhand tossing motion with the palm of your right hand (for righties) open to the sky, just like pitching pennies. The left side needs to give up. The softer you want to hit the ball, the more the left elbow folds back and left wrist bends back or gets “cuppy.” This will allow the club head to be released and slide under the ball.

Never pull the handle. The handle should work up and in so that the head can slide under and past as your chest rotates at the same pace.

Try these techniques and learn to love your sand wedge for helping you hit low, medium, and high soft shots.

FootGolf Scores

COURSES INCREASE REVENUE, ACTIVITY WITH GOLF-SOCCER HYBRID / written by TRENT BOUTS

There's a new hybrid in golf. It won't help your score, but it may be good for your game all the same.

FootGolf is a marriage of soccer and golf. Starting on the West Coast, it is now finding its way onto a growing number of courses in the East, including a handful in North Carolina.

Proponents and golf course operators say the new sport is generating an equally new revenue stream.

Among the pioneers in the Tar Heel State is Keith Hills Golf Club in Buies Creek, south of Raleigh. The 27-hole semiprivate facility owned and operated by Campbell University welcomed its first FootGolfers at the end of February and recently began advertising for more.

"When I first heard about it, I admit, I was taken aback," says Martha Sutton, Keith Hills' director of golf who is in her 18th year at the club. "It was all new to me and I thought, 'Oh, this sounds a little different.' But once I learned about it, I was all for it."

One Green, Two Uses

The goal of FootGolf is to kick a soccer ball into a 21-inch diameter hole. It is played on the same terrain golfers use, except the cups are set off to the side of fairways and greens. Because the average adult kicks a soccer ball about 50 yards, it is possible to set up multiple FootGolf holes on a single golf hole.

Keith Hills has two FootGolf holes on par 4, three on par 5s, and one on par 3s with yardages ranging from about 70 to 240. That means courses can comfortably fit 18 FootGolf holes on nine golf holes, allowing FootGolfers to progress at the same speed as their club-wielding co-habitants. FootGolfers book tee times in among golfers.

Still, like metal woods and broomstick putters before it, FootGolf has raised eyebrows — though not much ire.

"We have had some mixed reaction from traditionalist members wondering why we're letting people play soccer on the golf course," Sutton says. "But others love it and think it's great. The way we look at it, FootGolf is a way to reach new people who haven't been to a golf course before. Maybe they get a glimpse of golf while they're out there and want to try it."

Del Ratcliffe, president of Charlotte, N.C.-based Ratcliffe Golf Services and a multicourse operator, is similarly excited by FootGolf's potential to serve as a "doorway" for demographics largely absent from the traditional game.

"It could be a way for us to reach the vast Hispanic population that loves soccer, but is not really engaged in golf," he says. "I can see tournaments with golf and FootGolf combined like triathlons. There are just so many ways we can go with this."

Ratcliffe has been aware of FootGolf since friends introduced it at Haggin Oaks Golf Complex in Sacramento, Calif., last year. He committed to trying it after watching a demonstration during the Golf Industry Show in Orlando, Fla., in February. But it wasn't until late June that he was able to offer FootGolf on the Learning Course at Sunset Hills because "the people at the national organization are so backlogged with orders for the cups and flags and so on."

The American FootGolf League was founded in 2011 and now includes more than 160 accredited courses in 32 states. In North Carolina, the league's website lists Northgreen Country Club in Rocky Mount, Beau Rivage Golf and Resort in Wilmington, and Meadowlands Golf Club in Calabash.

Ratcliffe expects more to follow soon.

"I can tell you right now that more than any single thing we've ever done in golf, FootGolf has generated the biggest interest and influx of calls and questions and emails," he says.

New Revenue Stream

In the meantime, FootGolfers at Keith Hills pay $18 per round, including a cart if they want one. They generated about 600 such rounds in the first four months, providing revenue that Sutton says the club would not have seen otherwise.

Perhaps the biggest headache has been retrieving the handful of soccer balls that have blown into lakes on windy days. Occasionally an errant golf shot ends up in a FootGolf hole (which is 14 inches deep), but golfers simply take a drop without penalty.

"We go through an orientation with every group that comes out to play," Sutton says. "No soccer cleats. Only rubber-soled shoes. No running or yelling or screaming. We want them to observe the same etiquette as the golfers."

Like Ratcliffe, Sutton is excited by the possibilities for different groups to make the most of the two sports while playing simultaneously.

"You could see parents and grandparents playing golf while the kids play FootGolf in the group in front," she says.

What Keith Hills members probably won't see is their director of golf becoming a convert.

"I did try to kick the soccer ball once or twice," Sutton says. "It was not good."

Get a Grip

GOLF PRIDE'S GM ON TECHNOLOGY AND THE GAME / written by CRAIG DISTL

When it comes to the golf industry, the buzz typically revolves around the clubhead of the drivers, hybrid clubs, and irons — all part of the equipment that the golfer never actually touches during the swing.

“The golf grip,” says Jamie Ledford, “is the only part of the club that directly connects the golfer’s body to the club, and thus has a tremendous influence on the swing.”

Ledford knows a thing or two about this. He’s the worldwide general manager for Golf Pride Grips, with corporate headquarters in Southern Pines, N.C. From this main base of operations in the Carolina Sandhills, Golf Pride oversees a globally dominant brand that is the No. 1 choice in grips among PGA Tour and recreational players, competitive amateur golfers, club manufacturers, and club repairmen.

A native of Walla Walla, Wash., Ledford’s career path led him to North Carolina after stints with Starbucks and Callaway. He joined Golf Pride in 2012.

“I can’t think of a better home base for Golf Pride,” Ledford says. “I have always had a great love for the game and its history, so to be surrounded by this much golf tradition here in Pinehurst is, personally, quite exciting.”

With a bachelor’s degree in economics and a master’s in international relations from Johns Hopkins University, Ledford has worked at the highest levels in multiple industries. One important philosophy he brings to Golf Pride is the drive to continually improve.

“You cannot stand still. If you are not pushing to get better, you are probably falling behind,” he says. “At Golf Pride, we have been No. 1 on tour for decades, and we have to make sure we go to work every day trying to get better and never take that position for granted.”

As with driver heads and ball components, golf grips today are heavy on technology. A lot of research and development goes into them.

“We take the utmost care in our material research and pattern design to ensure the grip can be used effectively in all different types of weather conditions a player could face,” Ledford says. “In addition, we pay close attention to durability, ensuring that a player will get maximum value from their grips.”

Of course, every player is different. Some are muscular and have large hands. Others are finesse players with smaller hands. That’s why the company manufactures a variety of models, each geared to a specific set of golfers.

An interesting thing about Golf Pride is that it’s by far the top grip used on the PGA Tour despite the fact the company does not pay golfers to use its grips. Golf Pride mines data from its tour players to fine-tune the product.

“One new technology that we can actually talk about now is our new CP2 grip,” he says. “CP2 stands for comfort, control, and performance. We wanted to make a softer, more comfortable grip that still held up to our exacting standards for performance on tour.”

Ledford says the CP2 has a 2.5-inch inner control core stabilizer at the top of the grip, which reduces torque by 41 percent compared to the same grip without the core.

“Golfers love the feel of this new grip,” Ledford says, “and we are excited about the potential for this new platform.”

That excitement spreads to other aspects of the job for Ledford, an avid golfer.

“To be able to work at something you love — and would be doing anyway — is really quite special,” he says. “It’s something that I try to make sure I appreciate every day.”

Beyond Golf

RESORTS OFFER VARIETY IN THE CAROLINAS

/ written by ELSA BONSTEIN

For those of us who love golf, along with other diversions, a trip to a destination that offers more than golf is the best of both worlds.

Golf resorts not only give you the game, but also often offer fabulous rooms and fun activities.

The Ballantyne Hotel and Lodge in Charlotte, N.C., is a four-star, four-diamond hotel with spas, an indoor pool, two resistance pools, an outdoor pool, tennis, a fitness center, great food, and a wonderful championship golf course. Just beyond the hotel are the mountains and whitewater rafting, kayaking, canopy tours, zip lines, and rock climbing. Charlotte itself has lots of cultural events and historical places. This is a place for many adventures — not just that birdie you made on the fourth hole.

The Grandover Resort in Greensboro, N.C., is surrounded by two 18-hole championship golf courses, but this resort offers so much more. There's a day spa with fitness center, sauna, steam room, and hot tub, indoor and outdoor pools, and clay tennis courts. The Di Valetta Restaurant offers elegant Sicilian-style food. Beautiful decor, imported rugs, and marble baths make the hotel truly world-class. Nearby vineyards offer wine tastings.

Myrtle Beach, S.C., is known as the golf capital of the world with more than 100 golf courses in the area. But Myrtle Beach is about more than golf. Some fine resorts mean golfers can play and stay in luxurious surroundings with lots to do off the course.

Barefoot Resort in Myrtle Beach has four championship courses designed by Pete Dye, Tom Fazio, Davis Love III, and Greg Norman. After golf, there's a fun restaurant called Dirty Dick's in the Marina Towers. For tired muscles, there's the Jasmine Spa and a great pool.

Rooms in the Barefoot Resort high-rise overlook the Intracoastal Waterway and are a short drive from the beach and Myrtle Beach attractions like Alligator Adventure, the House of Blues, and Broadway at the Beach.

Just south of Myrtle Beach is the Litchfield Beach & Golf Resort. Three golf courses include Litchfield Country Club, River Club, and Willbrook Plantation. Built on an old rice plantation, they have beautiful, moss-draped live oaks and many small lakes. There's also a lazy river, two pools, a spa, and fitness center.

When you plan your trip with family and friends, go to a resort that offers more than golf. You'll love it.

Remembering Michael Dann

Longtime CGA Director of Course Rating and Handicapping Michael Dann died unexpectedly in July. Here, colleagues remember Dann for his wit, intellect, and passion for golf — and food.

Michael knew more about North Carolina's golf courses than anyone. I once told him I had a goal of playing each one. We quizzed each other on our knowledge of out-of-the-way courses. I will certainly miss those contests.

—Tom Johnson, CGA

Michael taught me a lot about thinking in a different way and looking at things from all angles. He was inquisitive and brilliant. His IQ was off the chart. One day I told him, after another one of his out-of-the-box ideas, "Michael, you not only think outside of the box, you also think outside of the warehouse." We will miss you, Miguel.

—Jack Nance, CGA

Most folks are language or math oriented. Michael mastered both and enjoyed delving into both worlds. Not many J-school majors minor in math, but he did at Illinois — thus his interest in the magazine business, but also the minutiae of course ratings and handicaps ... he knew so much about so many different things. And a quirky sense of humor to boot.

—Lee Pace, golf writer

Michael was a very humble individual and never tooted his own horn, though he tooted mine on several occasions. He would often introduce me to someone for the first time with the comment, "This is a former Irish National Champion." I rarely ever told anyone this about myself, so it seemed to me that Michael, in his own way, was proud enough for both of us. We will surely miss his golf knowledge and his quirky sense of humor.

—Chris Nielsen, CGA

From time to time, people — including Michael — would bring various kinds of food into the office. Michael loved food. He never ate large quantities at one time, but would nibble away at the treats all day (or days) until it was gone. I don't think anything ever came into the office that he didn't like.

—Judy Wimmer, CGA

Michael was a smart and articulate person. I never saw him angry, flustered, or unsure of himself. He was always smiling or joking, and he had that corny sense of humor ... I will miss him.

—Rita Longest, CGA

Michael would always listen to my questions or stories; he would always have a comeback or quip to everything I ever said to him. He always had a reply to my press releases with either a corny joke, or fix my mistakes. He made me feel welcomed at the CGA from the first minute I started.

—Rusty Harder, CGA

He never walked by me without a smirk on his face. I wish I could have had more time with him, as I learned something new every time I spoke with him — and not just about golf.

—Chris Zeh, CGA

Michael had a penchant for having car problems in company cars. After numerous phone calls to report problems, I started answering his calls with not hello but "what have you broken now?" He got such a charge out of needling me about it that he'd call and say, "so I was driving down the road and" (long pause while he waited for me to ask what was broken now) and then he'd finish with, "Could you give me the phone number for (name of the pro at whatever club he was visiting that day)." I will surely miss those exchanges as well as being able to share our latest dark chocolate discovery.

—Johnnie Gebhardt, CGA

Michael was a soup freak. He would eat soup for breakfast, lunch, and dinner. And it didn't matter what type of soup, Michael would eat it ... I will miss my friend, but will always think of him when I have a bowl of soup.

—Jason Cox, CGA

Worked across the hall from Michael for 13 years. I will miss the daily sounds of Beach Boys music blasting and pounding the computer keyboard because he still thought he was working on a typewriter.

—Tiffany Priest, CGA

Masterful. Intelligent. Caring. Honest. Affordable. Exceptional. Loving. Dedicated. Accessible. Nutty. Neighborly.

—Andy Priest, CGA

Michael had a great wit. He was quick, too! His mind was wonderful to behold and most fascinating to interact with.

—Doug Hardisty, CGA

Michael always cared about what was going on in others' lives. After our conversations, I would say to him, "Michael, have a good day." He would reply in an emphatic tone, "No, YOU have a good day."

—Scott Gerbereux, CGA

I worked with Michael on turf articles for the CGA magazine over the last 16 years. I always sent him more information than space allowed, and he found a way to edit it down and make me look good. His editorial skills and dedication will be difficult to replace. A special time each year was my chance to work with him at the CGA Father-Son Championship at Seven Lakes CC — a place where he spent the last 22 years of his life.

—Leon Lucas, CGA
